

Landing Page of the bus ticket booking system where when clicking on “Book Now” the user will be redirected to Signup/login page.

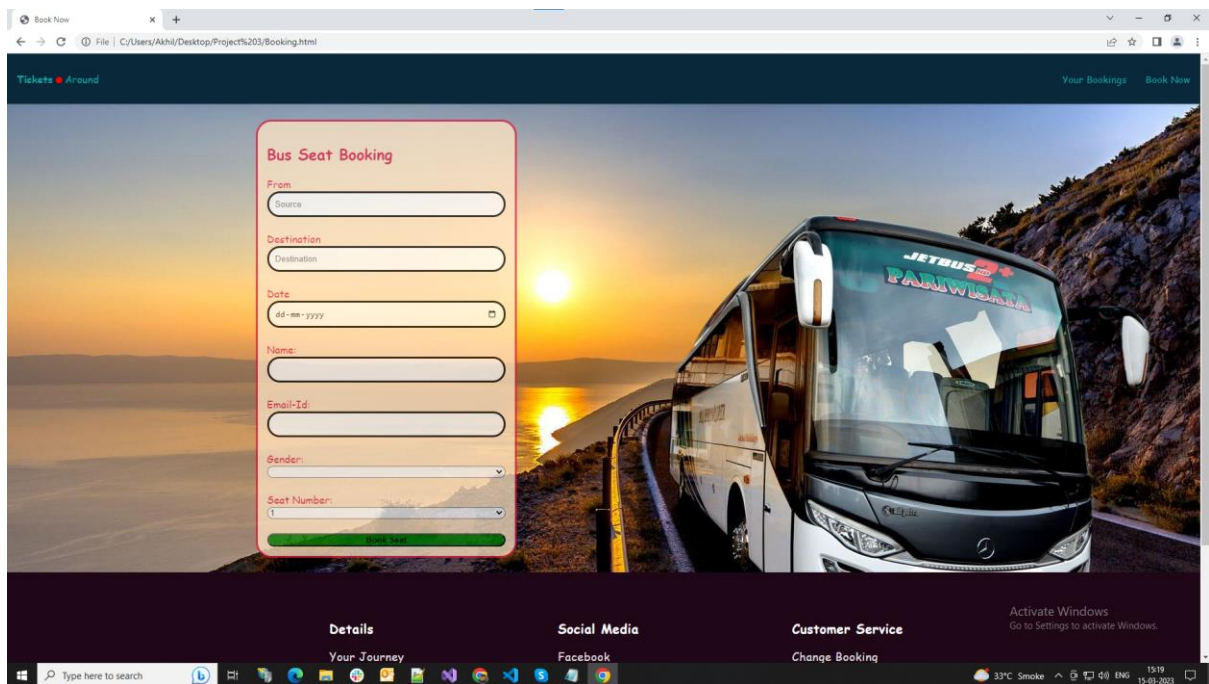

This is the signup/login page in which the signup container is currently visible due to its display style being block while the display style of sign in container is none.

This is the sign in container as its display is currently set at block. This is done with javascript

This is the booking page which opens only after a successful sign in. On this page a booking form takes in the required details and submits it for booking on which several conditions are checked like whether the seat which is being booked isn't already booked or in case a male or female user tries to book a seat next to a booked seat of an opposite gender.

The image shows a web browser window with a 'Bus Seat Booking' form. The form has fields for 'From' (Kalyan), 'Destination' (Dombivli), 'Date' (15-03-2023), 'Name' (Ira), 'Email-Id' (aashu.pandey3@gmail.com), 'Gender' (Male), and 'Seat Number' (7). A red box highlights the form. The background of the page is a sunset over a body of water. Below the form are links for 'Details', 'Social Media', 'Customer Service', 'Your Journey', 'Facebook', and 'Change Booking'. To the right, the Chrome DevTools console is open, showing the 'Application' tab with a list of objects. The 'Storage' section shows a list of objects, including 'Backbone', 'Payment', 'Periodic', 'Push', and 'Reporting'. The 'Frames' section shows a list of frames, including 'date: "2023-03-15"', 'destination: "Dombivli"', 'email: "aashu.pandey3@gmail.com"', 'gender: "female"', 'name: "Ira"', 'seatNumber: "7"', 'source: "Kalyan"', and 'date: "2023-03-15"'. The console also shows a message: 'The Sources panel now automatically pretty-prints minified source files in place.'
